Goal

The Advancements in Translational Science for Pain Management in Cancer Care Symposium: A Catalyst for Collaborative Innovation in Pain Sciences. This unique platform unites experts from diverse backgrounds, fostering interdisciplinary discussions on cutting-edge research. Bridging gaps between departments, the symposium stimulates new projects, aiming to advance the understanding and treatment of post-cancer pain. Breaking silos in pain research, it cultivates innovative solutions, shaping the future of pain management. J

Join us for a transformative event blending scientific exploration, collaborative networking, and the opportunity to shape the future of pain management.

Educational Objectives

After attending the symposium, participants should be able to:

- Generate ideas and connections required to perform cuttingedge basic and translational research in order to develop novel assessment tools and treatments for pain management.
- Develop methods to train the next generation of international thought leaders in pain research and care.
- Utilize existing pain management assets within MD Anderson toimprove the quality of care provided to patients.
